Izzie Batt-Doyle has claimed her second Australian record within a year, beating Kerryn McCann's half marathon record set more than 25 years ago.

Batt-Doyle, 29, competing at the Kagawa Marugame International Half Marathon in Japan on Sunday, posted a time of 1:07.17, taking more than 30 seconds off McCann's mark, which was set in January, 2000. This adds to Batt-Doyle's 10,000m road record set in September last year.

She also ran the fastest ever debut marathon by an Australian woman back in 2022 and in December ran a time of 2:22.59 – the third-fastest on record for an Australian woman – at the Valencia Marathon.

Batt-Doyle said she had watched the vision of McCann winning gold at the 2006

Commonwealth Games innumerable times, and had been inspired by her legacy.

She said her mindset during Sunday's race was to be competitive with the leaders, and focused on that battle rather than the record. That said, her attitude to hitting new Australian marks now was "why not me?"

"I think in the last six months since Paris, I have changed my mindset... why not me, why not shoot for those records and take a bit of a risk and go for it. It paid off last year with the 10k road record, I really went for it that day and got it done.

"Going into this race I had the record in the back of my head, but I wasn't sure I was at that stage where I could go for that sort of time."

Batt-Doyle said she focused on the race on the day, and the time followed. She is now training for the Nagoya Marathon in March.
